Great Grains!

Did you know September is Whole Grains Month? Examples of grain foods are bread, cereal, rice, pasta, oatmeal, pancakes and tortillas. These foods give our bodies and brains energy we need to move and think.

Whole grains give us protein, iron, Vitamin E, B vitamins, magnesium, fiber and antioxidants. They also may reduce the risk of obesity, heart disease, cancer and diabetes. Try making at least half the grains you eat whole grains. This will help you get all the benefits grains offer.

What is a whole grain? Whole grains are the entire seed of a plant. This seed, or kernel, is made up of three key edible parts – the bran, the germ, and the endosperm. To be certain that a product is a whole grain, look for the following on the food label:

- Whole grain (name of grain)
- Whole wheat
- Stoneground whole (grain)
- Brown rice
- Oats, oatmeal
- Wheatberries

Have you ever tried amaranth, quinoa, sorghum, or spelt? There is a whole world of whole grains out there to discover! Learn more at <https://www.myplate.gov>. www.schoolnutrition.org.
